International Research Training Groups

International Research Training Groups (IRTG) provide opportunities for joint doctoral training programmes between German universities and universities abroad. The new DST-DFG agreement opens up this funding line for cooperation between German and Indian universities. An Indo-German IRTG brings P.I.s and doctoral researchers from both countries together under a joint research topic or theme.

Indian and German doctoral researchers attending an Indo-German IRTG perform their research and write their dissertations in a structured and international setting. Apart from academic courses, this includes a qualification programme, cross-border supervision from both partner institutions, winter or summer schools, and longer-term, coordinated and reciprocal research visits at the respective partner institution.

Funding can be obtained for a maximum of 9 years, divided into two funding periods. The renewal is dependent on a successful mid-term evaluation after approximately 4 years. In the 9 years of an IRTG, up to three consecutive cohorts of doctoral students can be funded, individually for a maximum of 48 months. A typical IRTG comprises between 30 and 45 doctoral researchers at either partner institution.

IRTGs impact their research fields both by allowing top-notch research and by qualifying new researchers in the field. They strengthen research cooperation between the partner countries, forming new ambassadors of cultures and of science.
